06/30/09 - 48 HOURS: "Michael Jackson: Picking Up The Pieces" - A report on the life and career of music icon Michael Jackson, who died suddenly on June 25th, at the age of 50. Featured segments: (1) Correspondent Bill Whitaker reports on the bizarre spectacle Jackson's life had become and still is, even in death: legal woes, confusion over wills, child custody, and finances. Includes excerpts of interviews with author and CBS News Consultant J. Randy Taraborrelli; AEG concert promoter Randy Phillips; estate attorney Andrew Katzenstein; and Jackson family attorney Brian Oxman. (2) Correspondent Harold Dow reports on Jackson's complex relationship with the African-American community because he seemed at times to be ashamed of who he was. Includes: an interview with Rev. Gregory Jackson, pastor, Mount Olive Baptist Church, Hackensack, NJ; excerpts of interviews with "American Idol" judge Randy Jackson; singer Usher; Jackson biographer Nelson George; Rev. Al Sharpton; and excerpts of separate interviews with record producer/composer/arranger Quincy Jones and director Spike Lee by Katie Couric. (3) Lara Spencer (anchor, "The Insider") reports on what may happen to Jackson's children, who are now with his mother, Katherine. There have been unconfirmed reports that both Jackson and his former wife, Debbie Rowe, are not the biological parents of the two older children. Includes excerpts from a 2004 interview with Debbie Rowe and excerpts from an interview with producer Ken Ehrlich, who recalls how Jackson loved being a father. (4) Correspondent Peter Van Sant reports on how even though Jackson was an unparalleled performer, some of his financial moves were lacking. Musician Paul McCartney once gave Jackson some business advice about getting into music publishing. Jackson subsequently outbid McCartney for the rights to McCartney's music -- the Beatles catalogue. However, it seems that Jackson spent much more money than he actually made. Following child molestation charges, million dollar settlements and trial fees, he moved to the Middle East and stopped touring. He planned to rejuvenate his career and his finances with the fifty concerts scheduled to begin next month in London. Includes excerpts from a 48 HOURS interview with Paul McCartney (OAD: 01/25/90); forensic accountant J. Duross O'Bryan; Matthew Miller of Forbes Magazine; Bill Werde of Billboard magazine, who compares Jackson to Elvis Presley; (5) Tim Kash (MTV News) reports how Michael Jackson influenced a new generation of musicians who grew up long after his rise to superstardom - from Chris Brown to Beyonce to Ne-You, to Usher to Justin Timberlake. Madonna, Britney Spears and Janet Jackson have all danced on video with synchronized dancers, but Jackson did it first: he turned the music video from a promotional tool to an art form. Includes interviews with musicians Usher, Justin Timberlake, J.C. Chasez, Patrick Stimp, David Cook. (6) Correspondent/Anchor Katie Couric concludes with Michael Jackson's legacy - how his music defined the era from 1969, on through the decades of his superstardom, to 1993 -- when his life began to unravel. With his death, the darker side of his life is being pushed aside and his successes in life are being remembered. Includes additional excerpts of Couric's interview with director Spike Lee. ### CBS RELIGIOUS AND CULTURAL SPECIALS

04/26/09 - "Poverty: A Time For Sharing" - A presentation and discussion on poverty in Africa, Asia, and Latin America and how Protestant, Catholic and Mennonite Christians, Jews and Muslims -- all sharing a common thread of responding to immediate need and empowering indigenous peoples so they can control their own lives -- serve the poor and confront world poverty. 1) In Africa, a poor child dies of malaria every thirty seconds. Rick Reilly, sports columnist; Elizabeth McKee Gore of the UN Foundation; and Bishop Thomas Bickerton of the United Methodist Church, discuss "Nothing But Nets" -- a grassroots campaign to save lives by raising awareness and funds to purchase and distribute bed nets and save lives. 2) American Jewish World Service works with 400 non-governmental grassroots groups in 36 countries. President Ruth Messinger discusses working on behalf of underprivileged children in India and volunteer Julia Kaminsky speaks of her work in El Salvador. 3) Arli Klassen, Executive Director of the Mennonite Central Committee (MCC) presents a mobile health clinic in Laos; and Jim Bowman, former MCC representative in Kenya describes how building a dam provides a Kenyan village with drinking water in the dry spell. The work of the MCC -- across 66 countries -- stresses service to the poor and non-violence in all conflicts. 4) Islamic Relief (IR) serves the world's poor in 35 countries. Natasha Issak, a fundraiser; and operations manager Yousef Abdallah, discuss training programs set up in Afghanistan to empower the enormous number of widows and orphans created by decades of war. IR's work at a refugee camp in Sudan is also described. 5) Annemarie Reilly, chief of staff of Catholic Relief Services (CRS), the worldwide relief arm of the U.S. Catholic Church, describes CRS work in response to the 2004 tsunami in Indonesia; ongoing work in Ethiopia; working with Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity; and the holistic approach used to serve HIV positive people in Zambia. (Producer & Narrator: Ted Holmes. Associate Producer: Mary Catherine Brouder. Executive Producer & Director: John P. Blessington. Produced in consultation with: National Council of Churches; United States Conference of Catholic Bishops; Islamic Society of North America; Union for Reform Judaism; New York Board of Rabbis.)

being employed to express religious faith and belief within four different religious traditions: Judaism, Christianity, Hinduism, and Islam. 1.) Hasidic hip-hop artists DeScribe, Y-Love and Diwon are observant Jewish rappers with a spiritual message: to bring a more positive message within hip-hop, to elevate and inspire, while encouraging unity among all people - regardless of faith or nationality. 2.) Eugene Chisholm, Dennis Ogarra, Ian Williams, Charlie Thompson, and James Macklin are the members of an all-male a cappella group, Anointed Voices -- formed two years ago after meeting at Christian-based "The Bowery Mission" in New York City. All were once homeless and struggled with drug and alcohol addiction. 3.) Kirtan, the ancient Hindu practice of call-and-response chanting of Sanskrit mantras, is considered a form of meditation and is growing in popularity in the United States. Featured are Guara Vani & As Kindred Spirits, a Washington, D.C.-based Kirtan group. 4.) Qawwali is the devotional music of Sufism, the mystical arm of Islam; Sufis believe that communion with the divine is possible through this music. The Brooklyn Qawwali Party is an eclectic 11-piece orchestra based in Brooklyn, NY. Founder Brook Martinez was inspired by the late Qawwali singer from Pakistan, Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan -- and the resulting music is the sound of Qawwali with a funky jazz sensibility.
